STATEMENT: Drawing on more than forty years of practice in real estate, banking and commercial law, Mr. Christopherson has a very successful track record resolving cases referred to him for mediation. While his approach to mediation is very cordial and attentive, after reviewing documents submitted by the parties, and holding pre-mediation calls with counsel or the parties, Mr. Christopherson prefers to focus his discussions at mediation on those few key issues on which the ultimate resolution of the case will likely turn. These discussions often consider how the Court might view crucial evidence and questions of credibility. He always reminds the parties of the true costs of litigation (both financial and emotional) and (where a money judgment is sought) the risks of the uncollectability of any potential judgment. And while making clear to all parties that his questions and concerns will have no bearing on how the dispute will ultimately be determined if not resolved at mediation, it is very often the case that his analysis of the case with fresh eyes and a strong background in real estate litigation and trial practice leads the case to a successful resolution.
