STATEMENT

My approach is a non-confrontational, flexible method to reaching a resolution both parties can live with. We know these types of disputes, which potentially can lead to lawsuits, are stressful, but the mediation shouldn't be. I typically have all the parties meet together in the same room at the beginning of the mediation to see if we can hash out a compromise. If that isn't working, I typically separate the parties and will shuttle each sides' interests, offers, demands, requests, and issues back and forth. Depending on the case, we can modify how the mediation proceeds to best accommodate your comfort level. My goal is to have all parties willing to live with a compromise that meets their goals and concludes the dispute.
